

Oxford Said Business School MBA

Contributed by Hugh Morrow
Thursday, 14 December 2006

Established in 1996, Oxford University's Saïd Business School is Europe's fastest-growing business school, with a reputation for innovative business education. The School combines the highest standards of academic rigour with a practical understanding of business and wealth creation. Our faculty are engaged in boundary-extending research on key management issues, in dialogue with the wider intellectual community and with practitioners.

The Skoll Centre for Social Entrepreneurship at the Saïd Business School is committed to nurturing the social entrepreneurs of tomorrow.

In order to fulfill this commitment we:

- Provide innovative business education to potential and current social entrepreneurs
- Connect practitioners, academics and students working in this field across nations, sectors and disciplines
- Help practitioners and students to incubate new ideas and spin out new social ventures
- Support the dissemination of new ideas and the adoption of good business models and practice.

As part of our provision of innovative business education, we train MBA students concerned about social change to apply entrepreneurial approaches to social problems. If you are a prospective MBA student interested in this field, click on the links below to find out more:-

<http://www.sbs.ox.ac.uk/skoll/mba/MBA+Programme.htm>